Responding to the Climate Crisis

Editor:

Thanks for reporting on local governments' climate action planning ("County Climate Action Plan Plods Forward," Jan. 30). The graph of our county's emission sources also gives a sense of what we individual citizens can do.

With transportation impacts so great, we already know we can carpool, drive 55, ride a bus or bike. We can also push local governments for wise land use decisions, in McKinleyville for example, or make bus passes free.

We can eat lower on the food chain and support local schools in creating gardens to help kids eat healthy lunches while learning a lower-carbon food habit.

We can invest in heat pump water heaters connected to RCEA's low-carbon electricity, as we also support local governments in reducing "stationary emissions," the graph's term for the 12 percent of emissions mostly coming from gas appliances.

And we can support Arcata City Council members who intend to enlist their city in an expanding group of California cities and counties that have banned natural gas in new buildings. Those cities have recognized that new gas lines increase Greenhouse emissions while also boosting the cost of a new house by $5,000 to $6,000. With California requiring solar electricity be available for new housing, this enables electric heat pumps to operate at lower cost and with no emissions.

We face an emergency and these steps are among the very least we can do.

Patrick Carr, Arcata

Editor:

The workshop at the Wharfinger Building on reduction of Humboldt's greenhouse gas emissions was depressing and boring. The organizers should have asked people to sit down in groups and discuss different aspects of the problem, and then present to the body. We have to find out what we all think about issues such as:

1) lowering the speed limit, which would reduce our emissions appreciably
2) divestment from fossil fuels, as individuals or as a city (Charlotte, Virginia, did this)
3) what a low-carbon life-style might look like
4) biomass, or burning our forests for energy
5) carbon sequestration provided by our forests (Norway doesn't cut its trees anymore)
6) cows and their methane belches
7) walking the talk

Instead, there was a vapid Power Point, which offered drearily expensive expedients and the expectation that building all of it would just barely meet the renewable energy portfolio for 2025. Then we were all asked to run around putting little red dots on a limited number of preferred alternatives (personal consumption was not on the table), many of which could not be distinguished from one another.

Even though it was at the end of a working day and a big storm was roaring around outside, the audience could have been brought back to vitality if it were given the chance to address this looming catastrophe. Good cookies (they were) is not enough.

Ellen Taylor, Petrolia

Vote!

Editor:

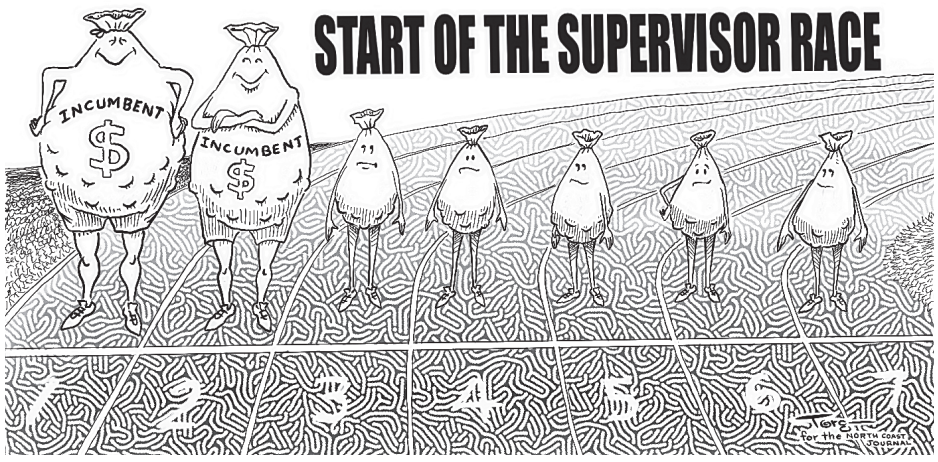
I am more concerned than ever that people realize they can change the electoral system nationally. There is a strategic approach for Electoral College opponents. It is to support the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact. In essence, it asks states to bind their electors to the winner of the national popular vote, not to their own results.

Fifteen states and Washington, D.C., with combined 196 electoral votes, have adopted the compact. This can actually take power when states with a combined total of 270 electoral votes sign on.

Two-hundred-and-seventy electoral votes is the minimum needed to secure presidency.

The League of Women Voters, NAACP, Common Cause and other National Advocacy groups back this. Perhaps it is time to have this conversation?

Ginni Hassrick, Bayside



Terry Torgerson

Editor:

Since the Terra-Gen fiasco, is there really any doubt in anyone's mind?

At a time when we urgently need great decision-making, here we are stuck with an incumbent in District One who is obviously not on the same page as the people in Humboldt County and is going about wheeling and dealing on his own. This whole episode has made me question whether the incumbent was working for Humboldt County — or for himself.

I believe we should get rid of the incumbent and elect Cliff Berkowitz for District One supervisor. Cliff is well-known for his service to Humboldt County. Additionally, he understands the many issues that we face here, and has solid answers. Cliff Berkowitz won't let us down the way the incumbent has.

Rick Pelren, Fortuna

Editor:

We have a huge opportunity in March to change the direction of our county government for the better with Cliff Berkowitz running for First District supervisor. I've known Cliff a long time; he is community-minded, willing to work for real change and is thinking about the whole community, not just a few special interests. He has always worked hard for the good of all in Humboldt.

This is a real sea change opportunity for Humboldt County. The supervisors work for all of us countywide, not just their districts. If you're not in his district, there are many options for support: contribute money, post a campaign sign, spread the word to friends and family or go door-to-door in his district. If you live in his district, by all means, vote for him! This could be a close race, and Cliff needs our help. Start here to support Cliff for Supervisor: www.cliff4supervisor.com.

Mark Cortright, McKinleyville

Editor:

Cliff Berkowitz has proven in multiple ways that he has the ability, desire and leadership skills to be the next District One Supervisor.

Cliff's leadership and efficacy are evidenced by the national Stop the Violence Campaign and the Start the Healing breakfasts, which he started. His community support ranges from Food for People and North Coast Stand Down to the Discovery Museum and Kinetic Grand Championship. His environmental ethos shows in his years of advocacy for Humboldt County trails. During our recent PSPS outages, Cliff was clear and calm while providing much needed information. He is a communication educator and a consensus builder, and an entrepreneur with years of managerial experience.

Cliff represents a clear, positive direction for Humboldt County. Please visit www.Cliff4Supervisor.com and join me in voting for Cliff Berkowitz for First District supervisor on March 3.

Fatal Apartment Fire in Arcata

By Kym Kemp
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

One person was found dead after in an apartment fire that broke out in Arcata before dawn on Feb. 2, according to Police Chief Brian Ahearn.

"Arcata Fire located one body inside of a ground floor unit," Ahearn said. "The person was deceased."

The cause of the fire, which broke out just before 5:30 a.m. in a large complex of apartments in the 100 block of Samoa Boulevard near Crescent Way, remains under investigation. The fire began in one of the green and white complex's rear units, which faced away from Samoa Boulevard, abutting a small creek and a children's play structure.

According to the incident commander speaking over the scanner about just after 6 a.m., two apartment units were badly damaged and there was slight damage to a third.

"Be advised we have had one person jump from the second floor," the dispatcher relayed to firefighters about 5:30 a.m.

"Heavy fire showing through the roof," a firefighter said over the scanner a minute later.

Erick and Amanda Cordova, who live in an adjacent unit, said they were awakened at about 5:20 a.m. by their hound dog's howling. They got up to let the dog out but soon heard an explosion.

"My husband ran outside," Amanda Cordova said. "He saw flames and he came back in and told me to call 911 and take my 5-year-old daughter and get out. ... Then he knocked on doors in his underwear telling people to get out."

An apartment adjacent to the one in which the fire started had two young children sleeping inside, she said, adding that when the people living there answered the door to her knocking husband, smoke was already coming through the vents from the neighboring unit.

Arcata Fire Department Battalion Chief Curt Watkins said the apartment where the fire broke out had smoke alarms, though the department was unable to determine if they were working. Smoke alarms in the neighboring unit were functional, he said.

Watkins said AFD inspected the property in June, looking for operable smoke alarms and fire extinguishers, as well as overall building conditions, and it passed.

Amanda Cordova said by the time she came out of her apartment, the fire had fully engulfed her neighbor's unit. A car parked nearby was also in flames.

"The windows busted out," she said. "The car made a really loud boom first. When I went outside, the car and apartment were up in flames. ... There were like four explosions."

The fire appeared to have completely destroyed a ground level unit and another above it. It spread so quickly, Amanda Cordova said, that an older man living in the upstairs unit had to jump to safety.

"The flames were coming out of his window," she said, adding that he broke his back making the jump and suffered a burn to his arm and respiratory damage from the smoke and heat.

"My husband picked him up and carried him away from the burning building," she said. "Then a police officer and another woman carried him even farther."

According to an Arcata Fire press release, APD officers administered first aid until paramedics arrived to take him to the hospital.

Humboldt Bay Fire, Fieldbrook Fire, Blue Lake Fire and Samoa Fire departments arrived on scene to assist and firefighters were able to get the fire under control, after which they discovered the remains in the downstairs unit.

Humboldt County Sheriff's Lt. Sam Williams, who oversees the coroner's division, said Feb. 4 that his office had not yet confirmed the identity of the person killed in the fire and "it could take a little time."

Watkins said investigators have "isolated an area of interest as to the cause of the fire" but were waiting to disclose it until hearing the findings of a parallel insurance investigation.

AFD estimated the fire caused about $400,000 in damage to four apartments. It noted that the American Red Cross was on hand to help displaced residents. Amanda Cordova offered her "kudos" to the Red Cross, saying they were "right there to help."

Strombeck Properties owns and manages the property, which includes dozens of one to four-bedroom units spread across five street addresses known collectively as Meadowbrook Apartments. According to Strombeck Properties' website, the complex includes low-income and traditional units, with the low-income units starting at $804 a month and traditional units at $875 a month for a one bedroom. Four-bedroom units rent for as much as $1,595 a month, according to the site.

AFD said the company's employees were on scene after the fire to assist residents.

Aamanda Cordova said she's grateful the fire didn't spread farther but she's sad for her two senior neighbors, one of whom was killed while the other remains hospitalized.

"They are best friends," she said. "They are always outside talking."

In its press release, AFD took the chance to remind residents to check to make sure they have working smoke detectors and to plan two ways out of any room in the event of a fire. Because someone died in the fire, APD is conducting a criminal investigation parallel to the fire investigation out of an abundance of caution. ●

Fortuna Declares Hoarders Property a Public Nuisance

The Fortuna City Council voted unanimously at a Feb. 3 special meeting to deny Floyd Hoisington's appeal of the city's decision to declare his property in the 1300 block of Rohnerville Road a public nuisance and to order it abated at Hoisington's expense.

But the council also granted Hoisington a bit of a reprieve, giving him until March 3 to dispose of hazardous materials on the property, establish residential water, sewer and electric service, and bring electrical wiring up to code. If he can meet that March 3 deadline, the council directed staff to work with him on a timeline for completing other work, which includes mold and mildew remediation, clearing of accumulated trash and debris and structural repairs. But if Hoisington fails to complete the work required by March 3, the council's action would allow the city to step in and clean up the place while billing Hoisington for the expense.

The hearing came nine years after the property and Hoisington were featured on an episode of the television show Hoarders and almost a year after the city began abatement efforts there. Specifically, City Manager Merrit Perry upheld findings that the property contains unsafe wiring, an "illegal gravity-fed water system that discharges" wastewater into the city's sewer system without an account or permission, dilapidated structures, evidence of an illegal water diversion and hazardous materials stored in dilapidated vehicles. Additionally, inspectors reported finding "extensive trash, debris and dilapidated vehicles ... throughout the site."

The city ordered Hoisington to clean up the property in November but a January inspection found the conditions persisting and Perry declared the property a nuisance and ordered it abated at Hoisington's expense.

In a hand-written seven-page letter to the city informing it of his appeal, Hoisington states that in addition to being his longtime residence, it is also the Tree House Christian Private School and a church, "commonly known as The Church of the Children, The Church of the Soldier and The Church of the Lost Word of Jesus Christ," of which he is the reverend. Referring to himself in the third person, Hoisington notes the "reverend is known for being a kind man who will go out of his way to help someone and is a good and loving father and, if you need something, he can probably find it for you. And liked by his neighbors."

"He is also a very well-known and powerful voice on social media as a conservative Republican and advocate of the United States Constitution and all of the rights and protections it affords the people of this country," he wrote. "And is dedicated about educating people about the true agenda and the evils of socialism and exposing the dangers of socialism and the lies they spread."

Hoisington alleges the city has violated his due process rights and falsified reports in a "malicious" and "fraudulent action." In a previous letter to the city in November, requesting additional time to clean the property and address the violations, Hoisington writes that he is disabled and on a fixed income of $948 a month, and also that both he and his son were recovering from recent surgeries.

"This abatement case is proof of fraud and widespread government corruption and conspiracy in an attempt to steal a much needed piece of land for a future development project," Hoisington writes in the most recent letter.

Staff is recommending that the council reject Hoisington's appeal, uphold the declaration of the property as a public nuisance and order that it be abated at Hoisington's expense.

This isn't the first time the condition of Hoisington's property has thrust it into public view. He and his residence were featured in an episode in the third season of the popular television show Hoarders that aired Aug. 3, 2011. In that show — which saw Child Protective Services remove a child from the Hoisington's residence due to the condition of the property — Hoisington conceded the situation had been in decline for a decade.

Alleging a host of pervasive code violations, from accumulated trash and debris to faulty electrical wiring and unsafe structures, the Fortuna City Council declared this property in the 1300 block of Rohnerville Road a public nuisance. City of Fortuna staff report

Dubbing himself a collector, he said the problems began when he purchased five storage units full of stuff at auction for only $20. Touring the show's producers through the property, he pointed out "valuables" and oddities, from rock collections to a taxidermy sea turtle. He also shows off a sizable gun collection, saying, "I try to have a gun for every occasion."

"I've got a bunch of other stuff here that I know somebody will someday come by and say, 'Hey, I need that,' and whip out a big wad of cash.' That's what we're hoping for," he said.

The show brought in a licensed psychologist, Rebecca Beaton, to speak with Hoisington.

"The smell in his house is unbelievable," she said after finding rampant mold and rotting food in the double-wide trailer. "I've been in many hoarding homes and the stench in this one is the worst I have encountered."

The show then followed Hoisington's progress as he, an organizational specialist and a work crew cleaned the property over the course of about four weeks, during which he says they remove four Dumpsters of trash and debris. The show concludes when Hoisington's child is returned to his custody and the place looks markedly better.

Photos included in the staff report for the Feb. 3 meeting show the property once again cluttered with debris, dilapidated vehicles and trash.

Bern One Down

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Just days before the Iowa caucus, Sen. Bernie Sanders doubled down on his promise to legalize cannabis if elected president.

"On my first day in office, through executive order, we will legalize marijuana in every state in this country," he told a packed rally of supporters. The cannabis world promptly lost its mind and many media outlets followed suit with headlines like, "Bernie Sanders Pledges Legal Marijuana in All 50 States on Day One" (Forbes).

That's all well and good, but before cannabis enthusiasts jump on the Bernie train to start planning the national Bern Out on Jan. 20, 2021, let's all take a deep breath. Even if Sanders is sworn into office that day and follows through with the executive order, it would not immediately free the weed and allow everyone to buy, sell and smoke with abandon.

As the Brookings Institute's John Hudak and Grace Wallack wrote in a detailed analysis posted to the nonprofit's website explaining "how a drug becomes a legally-defined less dangerous drug," there are two paths to changing cannabis' Schedule 1 status: a vote by Congress or through administrative action. As it turns out, the executive order path is actually the more complicated one, though it would sidestep the human pile of obstruction in the Senate commonly known as Majority Leader Mitch McConnell ("New Laws and Greening the Senate," Jan. 2).

Essentially, as the Brookings folks explain it, an executive order to reschedule or de-schedule cannabis would direct the U.S. attorney general to forward a request to the Health and Human Services secretary asking for a scientific and medical evaluation and recommendation from the Food and Drug Administration, which would have to do an assessment. That recommendation would then go through the Drug Enforcement Administration, which would "conduct its own concurrent and independent review of the evidence" before weighing in with its own recommendation to the attorney general. If convinced cannabis' status should be changed, the attorney general would then "initiate the first stages of a standard rulemaking process, consistent the Administrative Procedures Act … ."

Still awake? Good.

From there, the Office of Management and Budget's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs would conduct a regulatory review of the proposed rule before it can go into effect.

So, yeah, even if you're feeling the Bern, you might not want to plan on holding while crossing state lines until at least late 2021, at the earliest. So in reality, Sanders' stance on the issue isn't much different than his fellow Democratic candidates, all of whom have pledged to take steps to legalize or decriminalize weed federally. But saying, "On day one, I promise to start a months-long bureaucratic process" isn't going to grab you many headlines heading into the first contest of the 2020 primary season, so here we are.

Some big news dropped in the local cannabis industry this week with the announcement that Driven Deliveries, the nation's first publicly traded cannabis delivery service, intends to purchase Humboldt Heritage Inc., its subsidiary (Humboldt Sun Growers Guild) and its brand (True Humboldt).

The deal gives Driven and its "Ganjarunner" delivery service exclusive access to a host of local brands, including Lost Creek, Rambling Rose, Humboldt Edge Farms, Sunrise Mountain Farms and Juniper. In a press release, the company projects the acquisition will bring an additional $20 million into its 2020 revenue forecast.

"Humboldt County arguably produces some of the best cannabis in the world and Driven is honored and humbled that the Humboldt Sun Growers Guild chose to partner with our company," said Driven President Brian Hayek in a press release. "We intend to uphold its time-honored legacy to do right by all of our family farmers, as we welcome them to the extended family of Driven and Ganjarunner."

THIRD WAVE

Fentanyl washed into Humboldt County in 2019 with deadly consequences

In 2013, what's become known as the third wave of the national opioid epidemic began to wash over the United States. But fueled by the opioid fentanyl, for years it didn't hit Humboldt County, leaving residents and officials to read about its devastating impacts elsewhere as it came to dominate national overdose rates. Then in 2019, it hit Humboldt County like a sneaker wave, entering the drug stream hidden in various forms, from pills to powders and seemingly everything in between.

Fentanyl — a synthetic opioid that's as much as 100 times stronger than heroin — was virtually unheard of in Humboldt County just a handful of years ago. In 2015, none of the county's 43 overdose deaths tested positive for even a trace of the stuff, according to Humboldt County Sheriff's Office Lt. Sam Williams, who heads the coroner's division. The county found it in the toxicology results of one overdose victim each in 2016, 2017 and 2018. Then, last year, seven of the county's 46 overdose victims had ingested fentanyl in some form.

"Something changed," Williams said. "It's a marked difference."

The victims of the seven fatal fentanyl overdoses in Humboldt County — five men and two women — ranged in age from 25 to 44. In a couple cases, fentanyl was the only drug found in their systems. In others, it was mixed with morphine, alcohol, methamphetamine or alprazolam, a generic form of the benzodiazepine Xanax. But it was the last case of the year that thrust the issue into public view, with a 39-year-old man overdosing on a mix of fentanyl and cocaine at an Arcata house party on New Year's Eve.

Arcata Police Lt. Todd Dockweiler said the death came in conjunction with another near fatal overdose in which paramedics were able to revive the victim using the opioid overdose reversal drug Naloxone. In both cases, APD learned the users were unaware they were ingesting fentanyl.

"They thought they had just purchased cocaine and really were unaware that it contained fentanyl as well," Dockweiler said. "Folks using cocaine who are not opioid users, it hits them hard. It's a tolerance issue."

That tolerance issue is particularly acute with fentanyl due to its incredible strength, the great variance in dosing and the way it's cut into other substances, from cocaine and heroin to counterfeits of prescription pills like Xanax and OxyContin. But it's the drug's strength that makes it so dangerous. Consider this: while medical doses of narcotic medications like morphine and hydrocodone are given in milligrams, medicinal doses of fentanyl are generally doled out in micrograms. According to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, a lethal dose of heroin is generally considered to be roughly 30 milligrams, while a 3-milligram dose of fentanyl — which looks like a few grains of salt — is enough to kill an average adult male.

"A very, very small amount can be lethal," said Williams. "When you're dealing with micrograms, it's not something your average person knows how to measure safely or accurately."

Humboldt County Drug Task Force Supervisor Sgt. Jesse Taylor agreed, saying that using fentanyl to stretch or cut black tar heroin — which originates in Mexico and is the most common variety in Humboldt County — is especially dangerous. Because the drug is so potent, he said it needs to be blended throughout evenly, as any fentanyl pockets could deliver a lethal dose.

"If you hit a spot that's concentrated fentanyl, that's when people overdose oftentimes," he said, later adding that by the time heroin arrives in Humboldt County, it's been "stepped on and cut" so many times, it's hard to tell where in the supply chain fentanyl is introduced.

Fentanyl's potency coupled with its synthetic nature means it can be produced incredibly cheaply. As Taylor said, while heroin is derived from "a long, expensive process to extract opium from poppies," fentanyl can be made anywhere from a variety of precursor chemicals.

In his 2019 book Fentanyl, Inc.: How Rogue Chemists Are Creating the Deadliest Wave of the Opioid Epidemic, Ben Westhoff chronicles fentanyl's global supply chain. The vast majority of the precursor chemicals needed to make it originate in China. In some cases, laboratories there actually make fentanyl that's re-routed through other countries and shipped into the United States in the mail. But in most cases, those chemicals are shipped to Mexican drug cartels, which manufacture fentanyl in large quantities and either smuggle it over the southern boarder, or sell it on the dark web and ship it to clandestine laboratories in the United States.

"A very, very small amount can be lethal. ... When you're dealing with micrograms, it's not something your average person knows how to measure safely or accurately."

Because fentanyl is so cheap to produce and potent, and there are no quality controls in illicit markets, dealers have begun repackaging it as a variety of substances.

"Raids across the United States have turned up operations in houses and apartments that turn fentanyl powder into tablets using specialized presses," Westhoff writes. "Both the drugs and the machines are bought from China. These operations can make thousands of pills per hour. They stamp pills with the OxyContin or Percocet logo, and they're indistinguishable. ... The dosages of these fake pills vary greatly. One might have 10 times as much fentanyl as the next. Investigators believe such counterfeit pills were responsible for the death of music star Prince; about 100 white pills found on his property looked exactly like Vicodin but actually contained fentanyl."

Candy Stockton, the chief medical officer at the Humboldt Independent Practice Association and and co-chair of Rx Safe Humboldt, said fentanyl's presence in the counterfeit pill market is incredibly scary. First off, fentanyl's incredible potency can easily lead to overdoses when the user is intending to take an opioid and has built up a tolerance. But even more dangerous is when a user is intending to take something else — anything from Adderall to Xanax to Ativan — when they don't have a history of taking opioids or a built up tolerance.

"If you're buying prescription pills (illicitly), more often than not they're counterfeit," Stockton said. "And more often than not, the prescription pills people think they're buying have fentanyl in them."

Williams said that he didn't have enough information about Humboldt County's fatal overdoses in 2019 to say how many may have been the result of counterfeit prescription pills, but toxicology results for four came back negative for any street drugs.

National data and anecdotal evidence also suggest that heroin is increasingly coming laced with fentanyl, as well. Because fentanyl is so much cheaper to produce, cartels are also increasingly mixing it with heroin to stretch the drug further. Taylor said that task force sources say that most of the heroin bought and sold in Humboldt County does have fentanyl in it.

Interestingly, though, none of Humboldt County's 2019 overdoses came back positive for heroin. It's unclear whether that's simply an anomaly or because regular heroin users have higher tolerances and have also habituated themselves to carry the opioid overdose reversal drug Naloxone.

"Any drug where it's a powder or a pill, you just can't trust it. ... There can be fentanyl in anything."

Stockton and Dockweiler both stressed that there's no harm in administering Naloxone, even if the person overdosing turns out not to have ingested an opioid.

"Even if they've actually overdosed on Xanax, it will not hurt them," Stockton said.

Dockweiler also stressed that people should not delay in calling for medical aid in situations where someone around them might be overdosing.

"Minutes really make a difference," he said, adding that even if people are doing illegal drugs, they shouldn't fear calling police when someone's life is potentially hanging in the balance. "People should have seen by now that when law enforcement responds to something like that, we're not looking to arrest anyone for possession. Those are just medical aid calls to us."

But the biggest takeaway from the spike in fentanyl overdoses nationally and locally, experts say, is that users should recognize they never truly know what they're buying on the illicit market.

"Any drug where it's a powder or a pill, you just can't trust it," Westhoff said in an interview with DigBoston. "There can be fentanyl in anything. ... People don't even realize what they're taking — whether it's heroin, or pills, or cocaine, or whatever."

Dockweiler believes that was the case in Arcata on New Year's Eve. He believes both people who overdosed that night thought they had purchased straight cocaine, which they planned to use during a night of drinking. What they didn't realize is they'd actually purchased a kind of off-brand "speedball," a term typically used to describe a mixture of cocaine and morphine or heroin. The idea is that the cocaine gives the user a slight boost — without getting "too jittered," he says — to balance the drowsiness that follows heroin's initial euphoria.

"As long as I've been in the business, people have mixed cocaine and heroin," he said. "But cocaine is something we don't come into contact with here a ton."

Dockweiler says his guess is that the people who overdosed on New Year's Eve were not "habitual users" and probably didn't have "a dealer." Instead, they probably asked around and ended up buying from an acquaintance who may not have known — or maybe just didn't disclose — that what was being sold as cocaine was actually a speedball that included fentanyl.

"They were not opioid users and not prepared for that," Dockweiler said.

The trend across the country is that when fentanyl shows up someplace, it's not a blip but the beginning of a trend. Westhoff's book highlights the case of St. Louis, Missouri, which recorded just 92 opioid overdose deaths in 2012. That number increased to 123 in 2013, when fentanyl hit the scene, before ballooning to 256 in 2017.

Nationally, there were more than 70,000 fatal drug overdoses in 2017, according to the Centers for Disease Control, including 28,000 from fentanyl and other synthetic opioids. In 2018, the number of fatal overdoses nationally fell for the first time in nearly three decades, dropping 5 percent. The number of fentanyl deaths, meanwhile, rose to 31,000.

Humboldt County has long had an opioid problem, both with heroin and prescription narcotics. There are some promising signs. While the county once had more opioid prescriptions than residents, those numbers have fallen relatively steadily since 2015 and the county now has about 763 opioid prescriptions per 1,000 residents. Nonetheless, officials fear fentanyl is here to stay.

"Just because heroin is such a hot commodity here, there's going to be a market for this," Dockweiler said. "Hopefully it just goes to people who know what they're getting and are prepared for it."

Bake a Cake Already

A pep talk for the hesitant

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

You do not need an occasion for this cake.

Instagram and reality TV can crush your confidence. I'm talking about your baking confidence here. While endlessly looped video of buttercream smoothing over the sides of spinning six-layer cakes can be deeply soothing, they can also skew your expectations for your own baking. The same goes for binge-watching the Great British Baking Show — possibly worse than the fondant-fests of American baking competitions because the modest enthusiasm of its contestants can make you forget how much skill and experience they have as they attempt multi-tiered masterpieces.

Previous generations of home bakers, whether state fair winners or beginners, may have struggled with perfectionism in the kitchen, too, but they did so without mentally competing with the Instagram highlights of some French pastry chef in Vegas. The baking industrial entertainment complex has brainwashed us into thinking we've got to be professionally trained or stick to the box cake aisle.

Box cakes are fine and convenient — they exist for a reason. But here's my thing: You're still measuring and mixing. You're still greasing and flouring pans. You're still washing up mixing bowls and frosting. Really, you're doing quite a bit but Betty Crocker is stealing your shine. Not cool, Betty. Truth is, you're a couple of easy scoops away from fully gloating that you have baked a cake.

You may get hooked on the focus and satisfaction of baking. I personally find it relaxing to forget the rest of the world beyond the oven window and the batter rising in the pans inside. Does it make me a more chill or pleasant person in general? I doubt it. But it makes me a person who sometimes has cake and people will put up with a great deal when you've brought cake.

The recipe I share here is one I've modified from a cookbook I got in an office free pile. I remember it as a mostly unillustrated postwar Fanny Farmer tome but I was only interested in the cake section, and so I tore it out and discarded the rest. (Yes, rend your garments at my crime, but I was not paying to ship that crumbling monstrosity when we moved overseas.) Is this the cake that wins a reality TV show for you? It is not. It's an everyday chocolate snack cake (no occasion, no pressure) that you don't even have to crack an egg for. What they say about baking being science is true but this is easy, fun science — Styrofoam planet mobile science that you don't actually have to understand.

If you want a glaze to pour over top, you can simply stir up ¾ cup confectioners sugar with 1 tablespoon of cream and 1-2 teaspoons of vanilla extract (or Bourbon, rum or whisky, if you want a little hooch in there). It's no big deal. Bake a cake already.

Everyday Chocolate Cake

This recipe uses Bourbon or rum instead of vanilla because it's cheaper and won't make much difference here.

1 ⅔ cup all purpose flour
1 cup sugar
½ cup cocoa
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
¾ cup sour cream
¾ cup milk
¾ cup vegetable oil
2 teaspoons Bourbon or rum

Heat the oven to 350 F. Grease and lightly flour a bundt pan.

With dry fingers, break up any lumps in your baking soda. In a large bowl, whisk together all dry ingredients. In a medium bowl, stir the sour cream, milk, oil and Bourbon or rum. Add the wet ingredients into the dry and beat the batter until smooth.

Pour and spread the batter in the pan evenly with a spatula. Bang the pan on the counter a couple times — not too hard — and tap the sides to get any trapped air bubbles out. Bake for 25 minutes before checking for doneness by poking it with a wooden skewer at the center to see if it comes out clean. If not, bake another few minutes before checking again.

Let the cake sit in the pan for about 10 minutes. Then flip it over and release it from the pan to cool completely on a wire rack. Once it has cooled, sprinkle it with powdered sugar and/or serve it with whipped cream or ice cream. ●

Free Will Astrology

Week of Feb. 6, 2020

By Rob Brezsny
freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You now have the power to make connections that have not previously been possible. You can tap into an enhanced capacity to forge new alliances and strengthen your support system. I urge you to be on the lookout for a dynamic group effort you could join or a higher purpose you might align yourself with. If you're sufficiently alert, you may even find an opportunity to weave your fortunes together with a dynamic group effort that's in service to a higher purpose.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): "Victory won't come to me unless I go to it," wrote the poet Marianne Moore. In other words, you must track down each victory you're interested in. You must study its unique nature. And then you must adjust yourself to its specifications. You can't remain just the way you are, but must transform yourself so as to be in alignment with the responsibilities it demands of you. Can you pass these tests, Taurus? I believe you can. It's time to prove it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): While at the peak of his powers as an author, Gemini-born Nobel Prize-winner Jean Paul Sartre consumed an array of mood-shifters every day. He quaffed at least a quart of alcohol, smoked two packs of cigarettes, and drank copious amounts of coffee and tea. His intake of pills included 200 milligrams of amphetamines, 15 grams of aspirin and a handful of barbiturates. I propose that we make Sartre your anti-role model during the next four weeks, dear Gemini. According to my analysis of your astrological indicators, your ability to discover, attract, and benefit from wonders and marvels will thrive to the degree that you forswear drugs and alcohol and artificial enhancements. And I'm pleased to inform you that there could be a flood of wonders and marvels.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): I don't think I'm boring. How could I be? I have an abundant curiosity and I love to learn new things. I've worked at many different jobs, have read widely, and enjoy interacting with a broad range of humans. Yet now and then I've had temporary relationships with people who regarded me as uninteresting. They didn't see much of value in me. I tend to believe it was mostly their fault — they couldn't see me for who I really am — but it may have also been the case that I lived down to their expectations. Their inclination to see me as unimportant influenced me to be dull. I bring this up, my fellow Cancerian, because now is an excellent time to remove yourself from situations where you have trouble being and feeling your true self.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Soprano Helen Traubel and tenor Lauritz Melchior performed together in many productions of Wagnerian operas, often at the Metropolitan in New York City. Friends and colleagues but not lovers, they had a playful relationship with each other. A favorite pastime was figuring out tricks they could try that would cause the other to break into inappropriate laughter while performing. According to my quirky reading of the astrological omens, Leo, the coming weeks will be a propitious time for you to engage in similar hijinx with your allies. You have a poetic license and a spiritual mandate to enjoy amusing collaborative experiments, playful intimate escapades, and adventures in buoyant togetherness.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Eighteenth-century author Samuel Johnson singlehandedly compiled the influential A Dictionary of the English Language, which remained the definitive British dictionary for 170 years. We shouldn't be surprised that it was a Virgo who accomplished such an intricate and exhaustive feat. As a high-minded Virgo, Johnson also had a talent for exposing hypocrisy. In commenting on the Americans' War of Independence against his country, he noted that some of the "loudest yelps for liberty" came from slave-owners. I propose that we make him one of your role models in 2020. May he inspire you to produce rigorous work that's useful to many. May he also empower you to be a candid purveyor of freedom.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Is there a project or situation you'd love to create but have lacked the confidence to try? Now is a time when you can finally summon the necessary courage. Is there a long-running dilemma that has always seemed too confusing and overwhelming to even understand, let alone solve? Now is a favorable time to ask your higher self for the clear vision that will instigate an unforeseen healing. Is there a labor of love that seems to have stalled or a dream that got sidetracked? Now is a time when you could revive its luminosity and get it back in a sweet groove.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Was there a more influential 20th-century artist than Scorpio-born Pablo Picasso? He was a revolutionary innovator who got rich from his creations. Once, while visiting a gallery showing of art made by children, he said, "When I was their age I could draw like Raphael [the great Renaissance artist]. But it took me a lifetime to learn to draw like they do." In accordance with your current astrological omens, Scorpio, I suggest you seek inspiration from Picasso's aspiration. Set an intention to develop expertise in seeing your world and your work through a child's eyes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): I know a Sagittarius man who has seen the film Avengers: Endgame 17 times. Another Sagittarian acquaintance estimates she has listened all the way through to Billie Eilish's album When We All Fall Asleep, Where Do We Go? 135 times. And then there's my scholarly Sagittarian friend who has read the ancient Greek epic poem the Iliad 37 times. I have no problem with this behavior. I admire your tribe's ability to keep finding new inspiration in sources you already know well. But in my astrological opinion, you shouldn't do much of this kind of thing in the coming weeks. It's high time for you to experiment with experiences you know little about. Be fresh, innocent and curious.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Athens was one of the great cities of the ancient world. Its vigorous art, theater, philosophy, architecture, and experiments in democracy are today regarded as foundational to Western culture. And yet at its height, Athens' population was a mere 275,000 — equal to modern Fort Wayne, Indiana, or Windsor, Ontario. How could such a relatively small source breed such intensity and potency? That's a long story. In any case, I foresee you having the potential to be like Athens yourself in the coming weeks and months, Capricorn: a highly concentrated fount of value. For best results, focus on doing what you do best.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): According to my analysis, the year 2020 will be a time when you can have dramatic success as you re-evaluate and re-vision and revamp your understandings of your life purpose. Why were you born? What's the nature of your unique genius? What are the best gifts you have to offer the world? Of the many wonderful feats you could accomplish, which are the most important? The next few weeks will be a potent time to get this fun and energizing investigation fully underway.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Physicist Niels Bohr won a Nobel Prize for his insights about quantum mechanics. But he was humble about the complexity of the subject. "If you think you understand it, that only shows you don't know the first thing about it," he mused. I'm tempted to make a similar statement about the mysteries and riddles that are making your life so interesting. If you think you understand those mysteries and riddles, you probably don't. But if you're willing to acknowledge how perplexing they are, and you can accept the fact that your comprehension of them is partial and fuzzy, then you might enjoy a glimmer of the truth that's worth building on. ●

Mr. Moonlight

By Collin Yeo
music@northcoastjournal.com

Big Business plays the Miniplex at 9 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 8.
Courtesy of the artists

February is an often overlooked month, a wet and cold placeholder in the depth of the northern hemisphere's winter that isn't even considered worthy of 30 days. Throughout history various cultures have named the month after frost, river ice, firewood cutting, mud or even cabbages (cole crops were staples of the winter in most of Europe). On Sunday the moon will grant us its fullness, which in February is called the Snow Moon and has also been named after anything from bears to hunger and to sucker fish (as the Ojibwe people refer to it). However, all of this talk of cold things like frost and full moons and fish shouldn't deter you from going out. I assure you there is quite a lot of fun to be had this week for the reasonably bejacketed.

Thursday

The son of the late reggae singer Jimmy Riley, Tarrus Riley is a Jamaican-American singer with a decade and a half career that pays a fair amount of homage to the classic Trojan Records era of dancehall track-toasters while still cultivating a contemporary vibe. Tonight he appears at the Arcata Theatre Lounge with the Jamaican saxophonist and frequent collaborator Dean Fraser and his group Black Soil Band at 9 p.m. ($35).

Friday

There are two excellent cover acts playing tonight, each with a fair amount of buzz and popularity among those who are fans of fans of certain bands, if that makes sense. The Stallions are renowned for covering all things Ween, with live sets that do a fair amount of honor to the quirky jam-adjacent alternative act's vast discography. Tonight at 9 p.m. the group will be pulling those moves over at the Logger Bar for a free show.

About half an hour later our local chapter of Pink Floyd interpreters Money will be playing the entire Animals album at Humbrews for a mere $10. Seems like a good deal to hear what is one of my favorite albums of the 1970s.

Saturday

Big Business is a duo made up of bassist Jared Warren and drummer Coady Willis that has a big, loud and heavy sound far surpassing each guy's respective past bands, Karp and The Murder City Devils. Pummeling riffs give way to sick beats and diving wails of drone warfare. I first saw them about 10 years ago in New Orleans when they opened for, and then played in, The Melvins on the support tour for their hard rock-styled Nude With Boots record. The Melvins have always been one of my favorite bands and one of three groups that I have seen in three different decades (the other two being Neurosis and Low). That night, however, the Business boys really stole the show, both as openers and auxiliary members. They'll be playing the Miniplex tonight at 9 p.m. and I can't recommend this show enough ($15). Our local surf-metal masters The Sturgeons are opening, which is a mighty tough task but if anyone in the area is up to it, it is this trio hot off the release of its excellent album Figure It Out, which I promise to review soon (spoiler: it's really good).

Sunday

Dweezil Zappa, the eldest son of the late, great Frank, is rolling into Arcata on a tour celebrating 50 years of one of his father's greatest rock albums Hot Rats. The album, which came out a month and five days after Dweezil was born, is famous for its contributions by Captain Beefheart, Shuggie Otis and Jean-Luc Pointy, as well as its exuberant, almost anthemic weirdness. Tonight at the Van Duzer Theatre, Dweezil and his band will be playing Hot Rats and other like-minded tunes from that era of his dad's oeuvre at 8 p.m. ($55, $25 Humboldt State University students, $85 VIP soundcheck access tickets). The younger Zappa is an incredibly skilled guitarist and musician in his own right, and this is no pale imitation.

Monday

It's pretty quiet around these parts but I will offer you a couple of slightly esoteric options. Firstly, have you considered playing cribbage? It's the 411th birthday of the English poet and gadabout Sir John Suckling, who supposedly invented the game sometime in the early 17th century, so if you don't feel like reading his frankly not too deep poems, perhaps this would be an appropriate way to celebrate. If not, may I suggest going to the Reel Genius Trivia Night at Phatsy Kline's at 6:30 p.m.? It's free, and if they ask you any questions about the creation of cribbage by the writer of "I prithee, send me back my heart," then you will be in a unique position to turn some heads with your knowledge, my dear reader.

Tuesday

Local hip hop trio Lyricool, who originally hails from South Carolina, is the featured act in a spoken word appearance at Word Humboldt's open mic tonight at Northtown Coffee at 6 p.m. I've seen 'em live with DJ Goldylocks in a performance that made me take notice some months ago, so I expect tonight's appearance to be no less enthralling. The gig is free but donations for the artists are always welcomed.

Wednesday

Vancouver, B.C., electronic musician and producer Ekali makes the sort of epic ephemeral music that traffics in big swells and dreamy, often female vocals with weird affected vocal tics and pronunciations. It sounds like alien mall music to me. It's big and inoffensive and ultra-cosmopolitan: this stuff could play in nearly any city in the world without seeming out of place. This evening it will be playing in the city of Arcata, specifically in the Arcata Theatre Lounge, as Ekali brings his A World Away tour to the stage at 9 p.m. ($15-$25).

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Collin Yeo prefers he/him pronouns and lives in Arcata, where he is currently nesting in a pile of jackets and living off hot tea.

High rollers are in town for Humboldt Marble Weekend 2020 with cool stuff happening Friday and Saturday, Feb. 7-8 from noon to 6 p.m. at Redwood Acres Fairgrounds (free). Have a ball checking out the more than 60 glass artists showing off their skills while you mingle with other marble lovers in Franceschi Hall. For more on the event and who's hunting what where, go to www.humboldtmarbleweekend.com or Humboldt Marble Weekend's Facebook page.

Warm up in myriad ways at the Charles Washington Soul Food Dinner on Saturday, Feb. 8 from 4 to 7 p.m. at the Eureka Woman's Club ($20, $10 HSU/CR students). The Eureka NAACP hosts its 50th annual celebration with all the good stuff: Collard greens, sweet potatoes, mac and cheese, coleslaw, cornbread and fried chicken, plus a side of music and community. Now that's tasty.

The uber popular Inked Hearts Tattoo Expo is back Thursday, Feb. 6 though Sunday, Feb. 9 at Blue Lake Casino ($10 per day). Check out the work by featured artists Liz Cook, Tye Harris and Joshua Carlton, along with more than 30 other artists. Get tattooed on site or just see what someone else has up their sleeve. Plus tattoo contests and live entertainment.

Red Carpets, Gold Statues

Who cares if you haven't seen all the films or don't know all the stars. On Oscar night, a fantastic time is to be had wherever there's schmoozin', boozin and fancy shoes'n. Yeah, that was a stretch. Just like me getting into whatever I'm wearing this year. Oy. Strap on your heels, slip into your wingtips and celebrate the 92nd Academy Awards in style at one of a pair of red carpet events at local vintage theaters on Sunday, Feb. 9.

At the Humboldt-Del Norte Film Commission's seventh annual Red Carpet Gala at the Eureka Theater at 5 p.m., the shindig features a catered dinner and no-host bar (in line with the no-host award show?), plus delightful music by Michael Dayvid and the RLA Trio ($30, $25 advance, VIP $300 for a table of six, $350 for a table of eight). There's a best dressed contest and a red carpet photo op, so do your hair and have fun with it. During the commercial breaks, film commissioner Cassandra Hesseltine and KAEF's Nazy Javid will present the film-friendly awards. Doors (and bar) open at 4:30 p.m. — be in your seat for the live broadcast at 5 p.m.

Over in Arcata, the Minor Theatre is putting on its own Red Carpet Awards Celebration on Feb. 9 from 3 to 8 p.m. ($25, $50 VIP at box office only). This live viewing party features music by Sansfu (aka Absynth Trio), no-host bar and hors d'oeuvres by Brett Schuler Fine Catering. The awards ceremony begins at 5 p.m. and is hosted by William Toblerone. Look sharp.

Black Liberation Month at HSU

Cornel West. Ilyasah Shabazz. Lawrence Ross. Humboldt State University's African American Center for Academic Excellence (AACAE) is bringing some big names to campus for Black Liberation Month in collaboration with multiple campus and community partners. That means a slew of events and activities centered around this year's theme: "Reclaiming Our Collective Consciousness." Events kicked off on Feb. 3, but the month of February packs in plenty of opportunities to listen, share, come together and be inspired and empowered.

This week don't miss keynote speaker Cornel West, professor of the Practice of Public Philosophy at Harvard University and professor emeritus at Princeton University. West will speak on topics from his book Race Matters on Feb. 7 at 8 p.m. in the Van Duzer Theatre (tickets to West's original address in the Kate Buchanan Room were snapped up quickly, so the event was moved to a venue with more seats available). Jason L. Meriwether, HSU's vice president of enrollment management, will be the moderator. Free copies of West's book will be distributed to the first 100 students. On Feb. 12 at 6 p.m. in HSU's Great Hall, featured speaker Ilyasah Shabazz, daughter of Malcolm X and Betty Shabazz, will be discussing her book Growing Up X: A Memoir.

Later in the month, author/lecturer/writer Lawrence Ross will be discussing his book Blackballed: The Black and White Politics of Race on America's Campuses in the Kate Buchanan Room on Feb. 24 at 6 p.m. and Modi, author of Some Women Prefer Hell, will be speaking in the Van Duzer Theatre on Feb. 28 at 6 p.m. Tickets to all the visiting speakers are free and available at the UC Ticket Office (826-3928). For a complete schedule of Black Liberation Month events and activities, visit www.aacae.humboldt.edu.

Gretel and Hansel's empty feast

Gretel and Hansel

Reviews

GRETEL AND HANSEL. There is much to be mined in Western fairy tales but few are as adaptable to horror as Hansel and Gretel as set down by the Brothers Grimm in 1812, with the shunned children falling prey to a cannibalistic witch. In the end, Hansel's cleverness only goes so far and it's Gretel who must shove the witch into her own oven to burn as they escape to the sound of her howling. What better formative horror story for children? Reading the English translation as children, my brother and I, half raised on Japanese folk tales in which children appear as longed-for gifts, absorbed its shocking lessons: that hunger and poverty can break family bonds, adults are not to be trusted and nothing is free.

Director Osgood Perkins (yes, as in Anthony, his late father) delves into these warnings, telling the story, as the title indicates, with Gretel at its center. With The Blackcoat's Daughter (2015) and I Am the Pretty Thing That Lives in the House (2016), he has carved out his own horror subgenre focusing on the eerie loneliness of girls and women, bereft after possession, haunting and death. In Gretel and Hansel, he delivers otherworldly dread and gorgeous/ghastly visuals to flesh out the fairy tale, but the pacing is slow and self-indulgent, and its resolution does not satisfy.

We begin with a story, though not that of the title characters. Instead, it's the tale they've grown up with, the story of the Beautiful Child, a little girl in a pink wool cap on whom I'd put my money in a fight against the twins from The Shining. Her desperate parents save her from illness in her infancy with the help of a faceless sorceress. Soon the girl manifests supernatural powers and a violent streak that leaves her family no choice but to abandon her in the woods, where she dwells alone, luring other children to their doom. It's a story that lingers in the mind of teenage Gretel (Sophia Lillis) as she makes her way, round-faced brother (Samuel Leakey) in tow, through autumn woods to see about a job as a maid. The employer, a grotesque old man, is mostly interested in her virginity so she leaves without work. Her mother, mad, grieving and starving, casts out the siblings, punctuating her order with the sudden swing of an ax. And so they set off, Gretel a stoic guardian undeterred by haunting visions of the Beautiful Child and the sorceress. After a kindly huntsman (Charles Babalola) comes briefly to their rescue, sharing food and sending them on a safer path, she wonders at her own unease at the sudden arrival of help when it's needed — how it feels like a trap. Soon they come upon a spooky A-frame (which I'm sure I've seen tucked way back in Sunny Brae) that, while not made of gingerbread, is packed with food. The old woman inside (Alice Krige), her fingers stained soot-black, welcomes them with a feast, though Gretel, ever distrustful of gifts, insists they work for room and board. As days pass, she teaches Gretel about herbs and the girl's nascent powers, how they will both sustain her and alienate her from the world of men. It's this hunger — to be valued and mentored — that temporarily tamps down Gretel's suspicions until her brother's peril awakens her.

Unfortunately, the steady dread Perkins so artfully creates grows plodding halfway through (unlike in the swiftly paced flashbacks) and the anachronisms and mismatched accents start to wear rather than intrigue. Still, Gretel and Hansel is packed with beautiful shots: the bare forest carpeted with golden leaves; the pale witch emerging from a pool of black liquid; a plume of red smoke from a stone house; and the insect-like silhouette of the sorceress. It also makes some interesting observations about the dizzying power of literal hunger, as well as ambition and emotional need, though it could have gone further into the last. The relationship between Gretel, her options narrowing as she enters womanhood, and the old woman who urges sacrifice to achieve her full potential is meaty stuff, but when they face off, it falls away. Emotional moments are flattened toward the end of the film and one wonders if Perkins' reliance on the numbed-out faces of young women isn't more habit than choice. If cutting attachments grants one power it has to come with heartbreak we can feel, not a tearless choice. Nothing, especially magic, comes for free. PG13. 87M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

Continuing

1917. Director Sam Mendes' single-shot World War I drama tells the story of British soldiers crossing the horrors of No Man's Land with urgency and dream-like continuity. R. 119M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

BAD BOYS FOR LIFE. Will Smith and Martin Lawrence return to the buddy cop franchise set in Miami. R. 123M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

DOLITTLE. The eccentric vet who talks to animals played by Robert Downey Jr. With Antonio Banderas. PG. 101M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

FORD VS. FERRARI. Matt Damon and Christian Bale star in an excellent true-story drama about an engineer and a driver perfecting a race car in a years-long grudge match. With engaging performances and exhilarating racing sequences. PG13. 152M. MINOR.

THE GENTLEMEN. Director Guy Ritchie's return to British crime comedy brings back cheeky performances, action and problematic GQ masculinity. A clunky narrative underwhelming climax-to-denouement keep it from being too triumphant. R. 113M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

HONEYLAND. A documentary about a beehunter in rural Europe and the visiting itinerant beekeepers whose methods conflict with hers. 90M. NR. MINIPLEX.

JOJO RABBIT. Director Taika Waititi's satire about a Hitler youth recruit (Roman Griffin Davis) whose goofy imaginary friend is Hitler (Waititi) and who struggles with his beliefs when he finds his mother is hiding a Jewish girl. PG13. 108M. MINOR.

JUMANJI: THE NEXT LEVEL. Dwayne Johnson and Kevin Hart are literally back in the game, which is glitching. PG13. 123M. BROADWAY.

KNIVES OUT. Director Rian Johnson's tightly controlled whodunnit both pays homage to and raises the stakes of classic mystery with a stellar cast. Starring Daniel Craig, Ana de Armas, Jamie Lee Curtis and Chris Evans. PG13. 130M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORTS: ANIMATED. Animal Behaviour, Bao, Late Afternoon, One Small Step and Weekends. MINOR.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORTS: DOCUMENTARY. Black Sheep, End Game, Lifeboat, A Night at the Garden and Period. End of Sentence. BROADWAY, MINOR.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORTS: LIVE ACTION. Detainment, Fauve, Marguerite, Mother and Skin. MINOR.

PARASITE. Writer/director Bong Joon Ho's entertaining, explosive drama about a poor family scamming its way to employment with a rich one is stunning in its sudden turns and unflinching mirror on capitalist society. Starring Kang-ho Song and Woo-sik Choi. (In Korean with subtitles.) R. 132M. MINOR (color and black and white version).

THE RHYTHM SECTION. Blake Lively stars as a woman hunting down those responsible for the plane bombing that killed her family. With Jude Law and Sterling K. Brown. R. 109M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

STAR WARS: THE RISE OF SKYWALKER. J.J. Abrams steers a tremendous cast, fantastic effects and a few rousing sequences but this wrap-up of the Skywalker saga is visually and narratively cacophonous enough to drown out emotional moments. PG. 141M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

THE TURNING. Henry James' horror adaptation about the worst babysitting gig ever. PG13. 94M. BROADWAY.

A Question of Longitude

(Part 1 of 2)

By Barry Evans

John Harrison's H4 marine chronometer or "sea watch."

For 2,000 years, since the time of Greek geographer Claudius Ptolemy, we have defined our position on Earth by two numbers. Latitude tells you how far you are from the equator, measured in degrees, 0 to 90, north and south. Longitude is your angular distance from an imaginary "meridian" line drawn from pole to pole, running through the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, outside London, England. It's also measured in degrees: 180 degrees west of Greenwich and 180 east for the full 360 degrees. (Why 360? Blame the Babylonians.)

It's comparatively easy to reckon one's latitude. Earth's axis points to two imaginary "celestial poles" in the sky. North of the equator, the north celestial pole is close to the North Star. Measure the angle from your horizon to that virtual point in the sky and you've got your latitude. (It's zero at the equator, where the north celestial pole is on the horizon and 90 degrees at the north pole, where it's directly overhead.)

Longitude is a much trickier proposition. Consider a point on Earth where local noon (the sun at zenith) is exactly eight hours later than at Greenwich — Lake Tahoe fits the bill. Eight hours is one third of a full day, which converts to one third of the full 360 degrees, that is, Lake Tahoe is at longitude 120 degrees west. So if you know the time difference between your local noon and local noon at Greenwich, you've got your longitude. The challenge navigators have wrestled with for centuries can be simply stated: What time is it in Greenwich? Nowadays, GPS gives anyone with a receiver — or smartphone — that information. Formerly, radio signals, chronometers and the stars were used. I'll be focusing on the last one.

Radio. The U.S. Navy began broadcasting "Greenwich time" signals in 1905 and the rest of the world quickly followed. Earlier — 1872 — surveyor John Wesley Powell had used a telegraph line to confirm his longitude near the Grand Canyon using time signals received nearly instantly from Salt Lake City where Greenwich time was tracked.

Chronometers. Before radio, navigators would carry an accurate timekeeping device set to Greenwich time. John Harrison's 1759 marine chronometer, dubbed "H4," solved the wickedly difficult problem of keeping accurate time on a rolling ship at sea. As anyone who drives a car or uses a washing machine knows, mechanical devices can fail, hence the navigators' adage, "Never go to sea with two chronometers, take one or three." If you have three and one shows a different time from the other two, ignore it; if you have two and they show different times, which one do you trust? Marine chronometers — HMS Beagle carried 22 — were hugely expensive, and impractical for land explorers such as Lewis and Clark. (Lewis had obtained an English chronometer in Philadelphia but it wasn't reliable when traveling over land for long periods, and he just used it as a watch to connect the time periods between astronomical sightings taken over a few days.)

Celestial navigation. As long ago as 150 B.C., Hipparchus of Nicea wrote that lunar eclipses (which happen at roughly the same time for all Earth-bound observers) could be used to establish longitude. Of the many "clocks" in the night sky, some of the most accurate are eclipses of Jupiter's four bright moons. Galileo, who discovered these moons in 1610, realized that an eclipse of one of them, say, Io, could be clocked simultaneously by observers at two places on Earth, thus giving their relative longitude. In 1668, Italian astronomer Giovanni Domenico Cassini printed the first tables of Galilean eclipses and, later, working in the Paris Observatory, he published the Connaisance de Temps, an almanac (strictly, an emphemeris) predicting the exact times of the every-other-day eclipses of Io as viewed from a meridian running through Paris. Carrying such an almanac in your pocket was like being in instant communication with a home-base observer.

Next time, we'll look at how early non-Native North American explorers used almanacs to determine their longitude.

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) encourages visitors to London to check out the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF CLAUDIA MARIE POWELL, AKA CLAUDIA M. POWELL CASE NO. PR2000024

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of CLAUDIA MARIE POWELL, AKA CLAUDIA M. POWELL
A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner KENNETH D. POWELL
In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that KENNETH D. POWELL be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.
THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.
THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.
A HEARING on the petition will be held on February 20, 2020 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6.
IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.
IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

Community Health Centers

NOW SEEKING:

Licensed Acupuncturist (Lac) Integrative Wellness Provider

Open Door Community Health Centers (ODCHC) provides high quality primary health care through a network of health center sites. The LAc is part of an innovative, whole person, comprehensive and Integrative Team.

This position will work within a multidisciplinary team (MDT) approach, made up of a variety of providers such as a Medical Provider (FNP/NP, PA, DO or MD), Chiropractor, Massage Therapist, Physical Therapist, Behavioral Health Provider, RN and support staff.

The LAc will work side by side with our Primary Care Providers in a collaborative approach to serve patients who struggle with complex conditions, varying diagnoses, chronic and acute pain, behavioral/mood disorders, muscular-skeletal problems, and other health challenges, including a variety of opioid dependent/addiction related issues.

The team approach is an innovative way of addressing the whole person while working in an integrative fashion with the MDT. This has shown to support this approach by combining and considering Allopathic Western Medicine along with Eastern Medicine modalities.

The ideal candidate will have a passion for whole person care, knowledge and experience in herbal medicine and who may find their unique set of skills to support individual and group acupuncture by doing distal needling and other styles of acupuncture conducive to group and individual acupuncture care.
